

W. J. Prendergast, an American but a British soldier, who was exchanged after being captured by the Germans, brought out the accompanying picture sewed in his coat lining. It shows the treatment accorded British prisoners.
Photo from Underwood & Underwood.

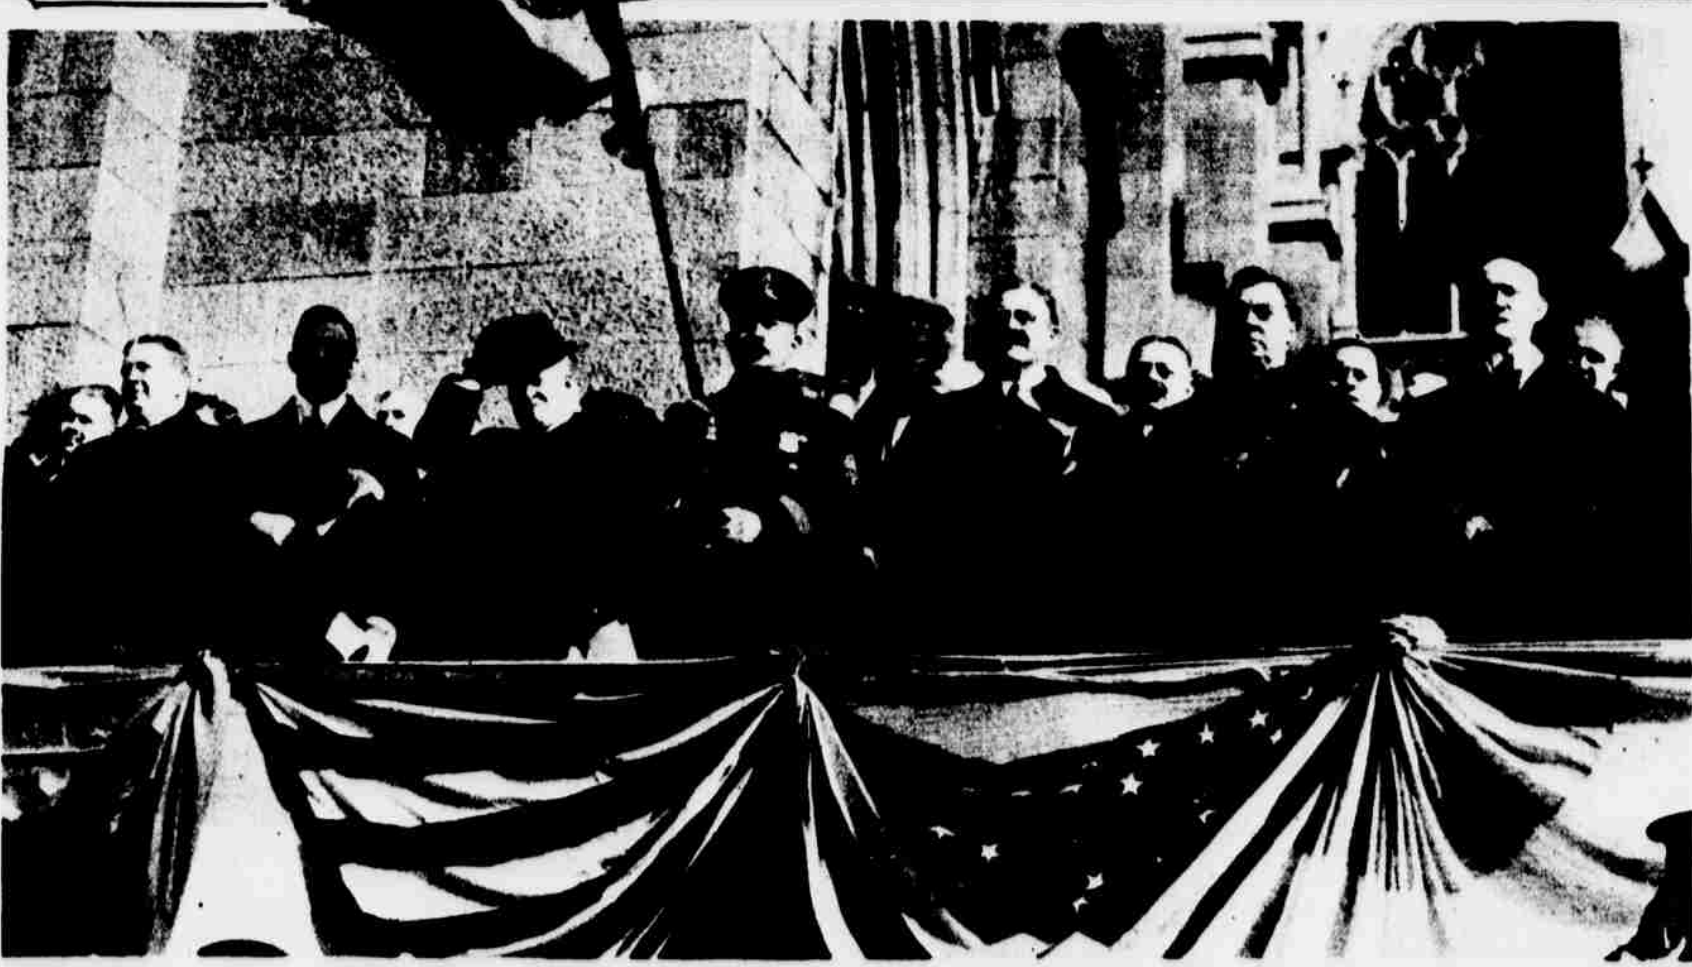

While a Frenchwoman scrubs away busily at an American soldier's washing, two of our marines and two poilus pose for a picture.
Copyright, Committee on Public Information.

The British tank which made a trip to Albany recently for recruiting purposes acted as a taxi to carry Gov. Whitman to lunch.
Photo by Central News

American soldiers leaving the artificial cavern which serves as a gas chamber for training in France.
Copyright, Committee on Public Information.

Mayor Hylan with city officials and dignitaries of the Catholic Church watching the St. Patrick's Day parade from the reviewing stand in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral. A stone coping that fell from the roof during the parade nearly caused a serious accident.
Copyright, International Film.

A new type of trench, known as a machine gun pit and usually situated some distance in front of the first line, has proved a valuable innovation. Note entrance at the left, along which gunners creep from the rear. The post, when in an advanced position, is one of the greatest danger.
Photo from International Film.